DIRECTOR'S NOTE

Welcome to Neverland! I am pleased to welcome you to Highland Park High School's production of Peter Pan and Wendy, J.M. Barrie's classic tale adapted by Lauren Gunderson.

For more than a century, Peter Pan has been a paramount story rooted in the freedom, imagination, and fragility of childhood. Central to the tale is the conflict between wonder and melancholy, the desire to stay young forever, and the truth that time moves forward. Lauren Gunderson honors this duality while bringing to the surface that growing up is not a tragedy but a transformation and that responsibility and imagination are not opposing forces. The magic we fear losing can become the strength that guides us into who we are meant to be. Our Highland Park Drama Club community can not be a better representation of these sentiments. I am so proud of our student actors for balancing the responsibility and imagination that it takes to put on a production. Watching them discover this story together has been a reminder that growing up is not about outgrowing wonder, but learning how to carry it with us.

Central to this adaptation for today's audiences, Lauren Gunderson reimagined Tiger Lily as a strong, complex character, one rooted in resistance to environmental harm and injustice. In Gunderson's retelling, the character is no longer a one-dimensional stereotype, but a fully-fledged individual whose voice, agency, and moral clarity are central to the story. We recognize that Tiger Lily's history, both in the original work by J.M. Barrie and in many subsequent adaptations, carries with it painful legacies of stereotyped portrayals of indigenous peoples. Gunderson has explicitly cited her desire to "confront, but not erase" these problematic elements, reshaping the story through an anti-colonial and anti-racist lens. We approach this work as an opportunity to emphasize the character's symbolic role, an advocate for justice, empathy, and ecological awareness. We hope this production invites dialogue about the responsibility of artists to engage with cultural, literary, and artistic legacy with care and awareness.

Lauren Gunderson, one of the most produced playwrights in the United States, has built a career on reframing familiar narratives through empathy and respect for young people's inner lives. She asks us to reconsider the stories we inherit and the roles we are expected to play within them. In this adaptation, she holds onto the adventure and wonder of the Neverland we know and love while gently reshaping the edges. Neverland becomes less a place to escape to and more a place to understand who we are becoming.

I hope that you find this production to honor the magic of Neverland while encouraging a dialogue around having courage to imagine a better world, questioning the stories we've been told, and facing fear with curiosity.

Thank you for supporting these students in their telling of this timeless tale in a new light.

Luke Ferrell, Director
